ATTEMPT TO DESTROY TUNNEL WITH DYNAMITE

Canadian Niagara Power Company's Shaft Escapes.

Wire leading to seventy-five pounds of explosive had been connected with discharging battery.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., April 26.—An attempt to blow up the tunnel of the Canadian Niagara Power Company with dynamite has been discovered, and the Ontario police and detectives are trying to find the persons engaged in it.

The tunnel is for the development of the power of Horseshoe Falls. It is being built in Victoria Park, on the Canadian side, and runs north and south from a shaft 150 feet below the surface. Night and day shifts are employed.

Connected With Battery.

Between these shifts somebody severed the wire leading from an electric battery used in discharging blasts, and connected the end with the cap of a dynamite cartridge that had been placed between two boxes containing seventy-five pounds of dynamite.

Had the attempt been successful the tunnel would have been destroyed, and from twenty to forty lives lost.

The seventy-five pounds of dynamite were in a natural position in the tunnel, where it was customary to place dynamite to blast away loose rock. The discovery was made by a negro, who at once notified the foreman.

EXCAVATIONS IN CRETE MISS BOYD'S THEME

Lecture Under Auspices of Archaeological Society.

TELLS OF DISCOVERIES

New Organization in a Flourishing Condition—Sixty Members Already Enrolled—Prominent Officers and Members of the Local Branch.

A large and cultivated audience assembled in the Columbian University Hall yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, as guests of the Washington Society of the Archaeological Institute of America, to listen to the first lecture given under its auspices.

The lecturer was Miss Harriet Ann Boyd, M. A., instructor in Greek archaeology, Smith College, Massachusetts, and her theme was "Discoveries in Crete, 1901." Discovery of a Mycenaean Provincial Town." Miss Boyd, who was fellow and Agnes Hoppin Memorial Fellow of the American School at Athens, 1890-1901, had the rare good fortune, while making excavations in Crete, to unearth the most perfect example yet discovered of a provincial town of the Mycenaean period, dating prior to 1200 B. C., and she gave a most interesting and scholarly account of her discoveries. The lecture aroused peculiar interest, because the audience had the privilege of hearing facts concerning the material relics of hoary antiquity from one who has herself added so considerably to the knowledge of this period.

The lecturer began by referring to Crete's contributions to the knowledge of prehistoric problems as shown in the excavations at Knossos, Phaestos, and Gournia, which have supplied many interesting links between the civilizations of Egypt and Assyria and that of Greece. She then told of her first experience in excavating, which was in 1900, when houses and tombs of the Geometric period were found at Knossos, in eastern Crete. During the following summer she returned to the same neighborhood with the hope of finding Mycenaean remains. Disappointed at first, her perseverance was at last rewarded by the unearthing of a Mycenaean acropolis at Gournia, on the Gulf of Miraflores, a site hitherto unknown, but coexisting with the famous "Palace of Minos" at Knossos. Knossos, the palace of the prince of the town, and the shrine of the local deity were unearthed, together with numerous small objects of various materials; stone, bronze and gold, and decorated with the Cretan "double ax," and frequent examples of Mycenaean gems of fine workmanship. As there were no fortifications, inhabitants must have been peaceful and industrious artisans. Evidence is sufficient to prove that the town was attacked, pillaged, burned, and abandoned not later than 1200 B. C., thus affording a rare example of provincial life in prehistoric times. Gournia is said to be a promising field for further work, and Miss Boyd will probably resume excavations there during the ensuing year.
